

←!-- the plot: everyone is excited, but there is a spy in their midst. it is unclear whether Molly is a spy too. However, she saves the day, what with the HRs not appesring and together with Puck and a busker drummer-yembé player they create a riot. Which was the intention of the HR, to instigate rebellion, flush out the spies and stay hidden. Do they record everything? Yes, but make it like in that illicit recording in NYC in Birdland. Perhaps it turns into a contest - karaoke, poetry. Why does Bongwe leave? He is in league, but the heat is too much. He knows an escape route tunnel. Molly is a spy, but she is fake-captured but she repents. There is another spy too, a weasly NPC type. A busker, or old fogey. Bongwe explains later that he warned them off. He smelt a rat (UB40 song, rat in the kitchen tonite) -->

"Hey Bongwe, glad you made it!" she greeted her old pal with a complicated-looking but totally random handshake sequence, which was their little thing, since uni. Bongwe's hand was sweatier than usual, and he was scanning the modest crowd packed into the cellar. "Ya, airy, girl, let me cruise to the bar," he said, embracing her briefly but tightly none the less.

"Do check out the protein bars and chestnut milk, strait from the tyke-place, courtes of Molly's neice, haha," Dora quipped.

"Yo really, is Molly even here?" replied Bongwe with unusual surprise, "I thought she didn't dig these ska/reggae type if issa..."

okay well it's about to start, check the music out. Bongwe whispered to the sound engineer dude, who ~~put~~ nodded and soon the song "There's a rat in the kitchen tonight" by the ole UB40 revved up and the crowd exploded in mass hysteria singing along at the top of their lungs.

The roadies were done fixing the stage, the lighting, the cables and the mikes, drums etc and the scene was now ripe for a giant legendary party. The song came to an end, and the last roadie jumped down from the stage and an expectant hum like a current went thru the crowd.